The following report presents data showing the attendance of national museums and galleries in England from 2013 to 2017. Culture is a significant part of our historical heritage and the research on museums' attendance rate is ~~substantial~~ significant.

In general, we can see both increase and decrease in attendance. The chart shows that attendance rates of British Museum, National Gallery and Tate Gallery substantially rise: from 2,6 mln to 5,6 mln for British Museum, for instance. Nevertheless, rates of Natural History Museum and Science Museum appear to fall (from 3,7 to 1,9 mln for Natural History Museum).

There is a strong correlation between attendance of museums and galleries who draw on admission charges and who did not introduce them, as the rate of places with charges falls (from 3,8 to 1,6 mln for Science Museum) comparing to the ones which do not have them (from 0,9 to 2,2 for Tate Gallery). Moreover, places without admission charges become ^{gain} substantially ~~more~~ popularity in 2015 and 2017 ^{comparing to} ~~than~~ museums which used to be on top in 2013, when the situation was opposite.

As I reckon, it is important to give recommendations for these museums. Firstly, ^{the} museums are to refuse admission charges as they harm the attendance. Secondly, museums have to cooperate with galleries to gain popularity.

All in all, general increase in attendance rates shows that people think of museums and galleries respectively, while the decrease shows that decisive actions and meres have to be taken to improve the situation.
